Acknowledgements

I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to the many people who have helped me to realise my goal of completing this piece of research and seeing it in print.

Firstly, I want to thank Professor Richard Griffiths for offering me the chance to work on this subject, for putting his faith in my ability, and for his guidance. I am particularly indebted to Professor Dermot Keogh for acting as my academic mentor, for initially putting the idea of this text into my head, and for supporting me through to its conclusion. Indeed, special thanks are due to both Professor Brigid Laffan and Professor Alan Milward for their courtesy, incisive promptings, and intellectual stimulation at a crucial stage of its gestation.

Additionally, I want to thank everyone in the Department of History & Civilisation at the European University Institute, Florence, and at Ashgate for their considerable assistance. It would also be most remiss of me not to mention the generous financial support of the European University Institute and Ireland's Department of Education, as their assistance allowed me to write the PhD that forms the basis of the findings presented here.

In relation to my research, I would like to thank the staff at the following: European University Institute, Florence; European Community Archives, Florence; University College, Cork; University College, Dublin; National Archives, Dublin; University of Leicester; De Montfort University, Leicester; Loughborough University; Public Record Office, London; European Parliament, Luxembourg; Harry S. Truman Library, Independence, Missouri; Dwight D. Eisenhower Library, Abilene, Kansas; John F. Kennedy Library, Boston, Massachusetts; Lyndon B. Johnson Library, Austin, Texas.

Finally, I want to thank both my family and friends for their encouragement and support. I am indebted to my parents – Tom and Jo Fitzgerald, to whom this book is dedicated – as well as to Siobhán and Jill, for their unending confidence, faith and love; to them all I wish to redouble my thanks from the bottom of my heart. Ultimately though, I now look to Mark Bell, crediting him for giving my life fulfilment, reason and hope.
